Introduction

Before entering the academic age as a BSc student at the Isfahan University of Technology, I struggled to decide between robotics and computer olympiads as an after-school pastime. After gathering some experiences in both fields for the first two years, I chose the robotics field and pursued it flawlessly for the following six years in a variety of academic and practical sectors, earning several successes as noted in the accompanying résumé.

Story of my life

There were many ups and downs along the way in many facets of my life, and in the writer's opinion, these difficulties only served to enhance the significance of the person he is now. Due to my parents' migration in the third semester of my academic career, I was obligated to go to Vancouver, Canada with them and temporarily abandon my academic course in the process. After observing my parents' stability in the new city, I collected my thoughts and made the decision to return home to finish my academic career, live independently, and discover my actual potential. After many challenges occurred during this decision, like Covid-19 at the begging of this journey, this rejoined student became a whole different person, as proof, his new achievements are obvious in his career and academic life. He completed his undergraduate degree with extensive research and extra activities to build up some soft skills for himself and started his career seriously at the same time.

Concluding Remarks

In the most recent chapter of my life, I consider myself as an independent, self-driven developer with some management experience, a great academic background connected to my line of work, who doesn't just learn by doing but also puts his ideas into practice to enhance his environment.
